What Killed Artemus Ward.

James Parton, in writing of "Artemus Ward," gives the cause of his early death in these words: "Wherever he lectured, whether in New England, California, or London, there was sure to be a knot of young fellows to gather round him, and go home with him to his hotel, order supper, and spend half the night in telling stories and singing songs.

"To any man this will be fatal in time; but when the nightly carouse follows an evening's performance before an audience, and is succeeded by a journey the next day, the waste of vitality is fearfully rapid. Five years of such a life finished poor Chas. Browne. He was not a deep drinker. He was not a man of strong appetites. It was the nights wasted in conviviality which his system needed for sleep that sent him to his grave forty years before his time.

"For men of his profession, for all editors, literary men, and artists, there is only one safety—Tetotalism. He should have taken the advice of a stage driver on the plains, to whom he once offered some whiskey, and I commend it strongly to every young man: 'I don't drink, I won't drink; and I don't like to see anybody else drink. I'm of the opinion of those mountaineers—keep your top cool. They've got snow and I've got brains; that's all the difference.'"

Underground Paris.

The catacombs of Paris are of enormous extent. They were originally stone quarries, and more than one-tenth of the city's extent is honeycombed by them. Some of them are said to have been in existence for fifteen centuries, but it is only within the last hundred years that they have served for purposes of burial. Of the old cemeteries of Paris, the largest and most popular was that of the Innocents, comprising not only vaults beneath the church, but great pits for the use of the common people, where hundreds of corpses were buried together. The place became such a hot-bed of disease from over-crowding that successive edicts were issued prohibiting further burial there, but it was continued until the place became absolutely loathsome. In 1790 it was computed that the cemetery was twenty-six feet deep in dead bodies, and at that time, after it had been used for nearly seven hundred years, it was finally closed.

LAND, STOCK AND CROP.

The cow that returns her owner the greatest profit, all other things being equal, is the one that enjoys the highest degree of contentment and comfort indoors and out. These factors cut an important figure in the balance sheet, and it should be looked to that they are always present.

That choice beef cattle sell well is shown by the sale at St. Louis of thirteen 2-year-old Hereford steers at $6.50 per hundred—the highest price paid for years. They averaged 1524 pounds, realizing $98 per head of beef. This is encouraging to farmers to grade up to that high-class standard of early maturity and superior quality. Scrub cattle still sell at 1 to 3 cents, and strange it is that the markets are yet glutted with the poorer class of cattle. The wide range of prices should indicate to our readers which kind of cattle to raise for the market to grade up to the full-blood sires of the beef breeds. These high grades begin at last to find an appreciative market demand. But how few there are who have any to sell. Let us lose no time raising all we can.—[St. Louis Journal of Agriculture.

According to a report of the Statistician of the Department of Agriculture about one-tenth of our agricultural products is exported. The sum is, however, made up from a very few articles. These are cotton, tobacco, meats, breadstuffs and cheese. Sevenths of the cotton product goes to foreign markets. All other articles except those above stated, when put together are but 3 per cent of the exports. The exportation of tobacco is not increasing materially or so rapidly as home consumption. More cheese could be sold if its reputation for quality should be kept up and there were more disposition to eat it to fastidious or peculiar foreign tastes. Butter exports could be made larger if they were of better quality. Our great American crop—corn—is chiefly consumed on the spot, not more than one-sixth, it is said, going beyond the boundary of the country in which it is grown, and only 2 to 3 per cent being now exported. Nearly two-thirds of this crop is produced in seven States—Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska, few others producing more than is required at home, and the larger portion having a deficiency.

One important point in keeping a farm clear from weeds is to see that these germs are not imported in purchased seeds. Weeds are often introduced by the farmer's own animals. Horses that have been fed at the town stables, and cattle that have been allowed to forage on the highways, may each be the means of bringing obnoxious weeds onto the farm. For the best crops clean cultivation is the antidote. Cut the weeds off at the surface of the ground at time when they are at their best, that is at the time of flowering, and before the seed has grown sufficient to germinate. This is the best method of dealing with weeds where they have become a pest in meadows and pastures. In the latter sheep are very efficient weed destroyers as they will browse closely many varieties that cattle will not touch. In some countries it is said there are fields entirely free from weeds, owing to very high cultivation and careful selection of seeds and manures. Such results are not to be expected in this country, and we shall continue to have weeds as heretofore, but they can be kept in such subjection as to reduce their injurious effects to a minimum. Where they serve no better use, they at least give evidence of the soil's fertility. Unless rich ground is closely covered with useful plants it is quite certain to produce weeds. Nothing surpasses clover for smothering weeds. If sown thickly, and stock is kept off from it after the mowing, so that some of the seed from the second crop will be scattered, it will give complete possession of the field, to the exclusion of weeds.—[Exchange.
